Wilson Log House
Macon County, North Carolina

DESCRIPTION:

Located southwest of Highlands in the mountainous backcountry of Macon County, the Wilson Log House is a single-pen log cabin dating from the late nineteenth century. It stands on a rise above unpaved Hickory Gap Road (SR 1621), encompassed by a rectangular yard of approximately three-quarters of an acre. Bounded by the road, old fence lines, hedges, and a stream bed leading from a spring at the yard's southwest corner to the road, the nominated property is picturesquely surrounded by meadows, woods, and nearby mountains. The visible mountain tops at this location do not appear especially high, but that is only because the site itself has an elevation of approximately 4,000 feet. No other houses or other buildings are located within sight of the Wilson Log House, and save for a power line that runs to a pole in the back yard, the sense of peaceful rural isolation is complete. (The owner plans to have the power line on the property placed underground.)

Measuring approximately eighteen by twenty feet, the one-room-with-loft house is built of wide, half-dovetail-notched logs resting on a fieldstone foundation. Most of the original red clay chinking has been lost or otherwise removed as part of the current restoration of the house but will be replaced by chinking of a similar material. A metal-sheathed gable roof with weatherboarded gable ends tops the house. It changes pitch and extends forward on the front (east) to form the shed roof of the porch. A fieldstone chimney at the north end of the house serves a single fireplace on the main floor. Aligned single doorways (the doors themselves have been removed) provide access to the house from the front and rear, while fenestration consists of gable-end window openings--one on the west side of the chimney, two on the south elevation, and one in the south end of the loft. Only the two on the south elevation retain their fixed, six-light sash. A shed-roofed porch extends across the front of the house. Its floor is gone, but the rustic pole posts and balustrade rails remain.

Inside, the Wilson Log House consists of a single room on the first floor with a one-room loft above. A plain stair rises with a quarter turn to the loft from the northeast corner of the main room. The walls and ceilings of the first floor and loft remain unfinished with all structural elements exposed. Earlier in the twentieth century, the first-floor walls were apparently covered with cardboard and paper--a typical solution for insulation in log houses--but only fragments of this covering remain today. While original wide-board flooring remains on the south half of the first story, the flooring of the north half (approximately) has been replaced with more narrow boards. The date of this change is not known. The stone fireplace appears to have replacement stone facing which may date from the 1920s or 1930s. In the loft, two logs rise above the floor, forming a low knee wall beneath the steeply pitched roof.

A frame addition that was built to the rear of the house, probably during the early twentieth century, was removed in recent years, leaving the original log core of the house. Although the Wilson Log House has undergone several alterations through the years (as described above) and is at present in only fair-to-good condition, it survives as one of the most intact examples of the single-pen log house type in Macon County and is currently undergoing a sensitive restoration/rehabilitation. It retains a high degree of integrity in terms of location, setting, design, feeling, and association, and a sufficient level of integrity of materials and workmanship to merit listing in the National Register.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE:

Summary -

Built by Jeremiah W. Wilson in the isolated mountains of Macon County, the ca. 1882 Wilson Log House is a rare surviving example of a house type that was common during the nineteenth-century years of settlement in Macon County. Its single-room-with-loft plan, half-dovetail-notched log construction, gable roof, gable-end fieldstone chimney, shed-roofed front porch, and unfinished interior with corner stair characterize the typical nineteenth-century single-pen log house of the region. The preservation of the house is due in part to the fact that it was owned and occupied by members of Jerry Wilson's family for three quarters of a century. In a county where most of the nineteenth-century settlers' houses were of log construction, and where most of these have been destroyed or altered beyond recognition, the Wilson Log House is architecturally significant at the local level, fulfilling Criterion C for listing in the National Register. Its period of significance is ca. 1882, the period during which the house was constructed. The significance of the Wilson Log House is discussed in Context 3: The Richness of Macon's Resources Realized, 1875-1904 of "Historic and Architectural Resources of Macon County, North Carolina, 1826-1945." It meets the registration requirements for significance in the history of the county's architecture, outlined in Property Type 2: Houses.

Historical Background -

On December 4, 1878, J. W. Wilson purchased 126 acres of mountain land at the southern end of Macon County from M. L. and Ann E. Kelly for $180 (Deed Book S, p. 307). Several years later, he erected the single-pen log house that became home to his large family.

Information about Jerry Wilson is limited. He was born June 26, 1843 in Macon County to John and Elizabeth Henderson Wilson (Vital Statistics - Deaths, Vol. 6, p. 83). On May 30, 1861, he enlisted in the Confederate Army in Jackson County, starting off as a private in Company B, Twentieth-fifth Regiment, North Carolina Troops. In November or December of 1862 Wilson was promoted to sergeant; the following May he transferred to Company A, Twentieth Regiment, South Carolina Infantry (North Carolina Troops, Vol. VII, p. 378).

When Wilson left the army is not known, but on January 21, 1864, J. W. Wilson and H. C. Brown married in Macon County (Index to Vital Statistics - Marriages). Hulda Caroline (Brown) Wilson was born March 19, 1850 to Ableson and Mary (McCall) Brown in Rabun County, Georgia (Vital Statistics - Deaths, Vol. 18, pg. 78). She and Jerry had fourteen children, eight of whom survived to adulthood. Through most of their marriage, they lived in this small log house, and Jerry farmed the surrounding acreage. According to Jerry and Hulda's second child, Andrew M. "Andy" Wilson (1867-1966), the family moved to this mountain property when he was about fifteen years old (ca. 1882). Jerry Wilson had sold all his livestock, except the sheep at Hulda's request, in order to buy the land. The family first lived in an older log house on the property, but soon thereafter built the present house which became their home (Talley Interview). Jerry Wilson died on July 4, 1925 (Vital Statistics -Deaths, Vol. 6, p. 83), and Hulda followed on April 30, 1939 (Vital Statistics -Deaths, Vol. 18, p. 78), but Wilson family members continued to occupy the log house for nearly two more decades. Zillah Wilson, the thirteenth child of Jerry and Hulda, was the last family member to live in the house (Talley Interview). She sold the property in 1956 to Robert J. and Hazel Killebrew (Deed Book I-6, p. 421), who conveyed it to Rudolf F. and Hanny T. Bertram in 1958 (Deed Book P-6, p. 118). On September 29, 1988, Richard Woodruff, the present owner, purchased this and additional acreage from the Rudolf F. and Hanny T. Bertram Trust (Deed Book C-18, p. 85). He is in the process of rehabilitating/restoring the house as an extremely rare surviving example of a Macon County settlement-era house type. (Woodruff Interview).

Architecture Context: Nineteenth-Century Log Houses in Macon County -

Located in southwestern North Carolina, Macon County encompasses over five hundred square miles of mountainous terrain mixed with rolling hills, expansive valleys, and river basins. When formed from Haywood County during the 1828-1829 session of the General Assembly, Macon embraced not only the land within its present boundaries, but also all of what is now Cherokee, Graham, Swain, and Clay counties and portions of Jackson County. In the decades following its formation, Macon County evolved from a rough mountain frontier where hunting and trapping was the principal means of survival to a more economically diverse and socially stable region with schools, churches, large-scale farming, and tourism.

When white settlers came to Macon County, they built log houses and support structures--a logical choice in a place where there was an abundance of timber as well as a lack of builders and sawmills. By the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, log houses akin to those built in the early years of the century continued to be built in the more remote areas of the county--typically by subsistence farmers--although at the same time larger and more stylish frame houses were also being constructed in areas of denser population.

Log dwellings typically had one to two rooms, a stone gable-end chimney, and little or no stylish embellishment. They were simple, unpretentious, practical houses. Although many of these houses were built, surviving examples are rare due to the ravages of deterioration, destruction, and heavy remodelling. The best examples remain intact because they have stayed in possession of the original families and/or are located in remote areas less subject to development and intrusion by new housing.

The oldest surviving log house in Macon County is located on the John Gillespie Farm. Built in 1826, the one-and-a-half-story dwelling features a two-room plan with a gable-end chimney. In the late nineteenth century, a rear ell was added and the exterior was covered with weatherboard siding. Descendants of John Gillespie built a one-and-a-half-story log house on the Jeremiah Page Harrison Farm in 1858. Like its predecessor, the Harrison house is a two-room dwelling with an added rear ell, the whole covered with weatherboard siding. Around 1832 William Morrison, Sr., built the county's best surviving two-story log house. Although the logs remain exposed on the interior, they have been covered with weatherboards on the exterior. A small front addition was built in the early twentieth century. Bill Henry built a log house in the Ellijay community around 1860; his son, Jake, added weatherboard siding and rooms on the rear and north side in the late nineteenth or early twentieth century. A good example of the log houses built in Macon County during the late nineteenth century is the Tippet House in the Piney Grove community. It is a one-and-a-half-story cabin with half-dovetail log corner notches, tightly chinked walls, and a gable-end stone chimney. The rear ell, which appears to be of boxed construction, probably dates from the first half of the twentieth century. During the same period, George Burrell built a single-pen log house that George Talley later covered with board-and-batten siding around the turn of the century.

As can be seen from these and several other nineteenth-century log houses in the county, most underwent alterations in later years that disguised their original appearance. Many of the other traditional nineteenth-century log houses built in Macon County disappeared during the first few decades of the twentieth century as they were replaced by more substantial frame dwellings. (This discussion of nineteenth-century log houses in Macon County is based on the Multiple Property Documentation Form for Macon County prepared in 1996 by Jennifer Martin.)

Within the context of the rare surviving examples of log houses built in Macon County during the nineteenth century, the ca. 1882 Wilson Log House compares favorably. Like many of the other nineteenth-century houses of log construction, it started out as a single-pen cabin with a gable-end stone chimney. Located in a sparsely settled area and used continuously by the Wilson family for three quarters of a century, the house has remained intact, although, like many other log houses in the county, it received a frame rear addition in the early twentieth century. Sometime after the construction of the house, at least part of it was sheathed with weatherboards. At the present time, however, the Wilson Log House is undergoing restoration/rehabilitation. With the removal of the rear addition and the weatherboard siding, the house once again exhibits its original appearance from the 1880s.
